An interdisciplinary, online, journal focusing on the intersectional aspects of privilege, Understanding and Dismantling Privilege works to bridge academia and practice, highlight activism, and offers a forum for creative introspection on issues of inequity, power and privilege.

Journal Sections:

Research

Tools & Strategies

Creative Work & Self-Reflection

Youth Voices

Journal Goals:

1. To create a forum for research and creative work that critically examines issues of privilege, power, oppression, white supremacy, and social justice.
2. To encourage examination of the intersections of systems of privilege and oppression, including but not limited to race/ethnicity, sex/gender, sexuality, class, nationality and ability/disability.
3. To provide a space for self-reflection, bridging the personal and political.
4. To bridge theory and practice by providing a forum for sharing curriculum, programming, tools, strategies, and best practices.
5. To foster interdisciplinary dialogue.
6. To encourage the development of and provide opportunities for learning from youth voices.

Early praise for Understanding and Dismantling Privilege:

I've been reading the new WPC Journal and its great! Wonderful range of articles that I'm really enjoying. This is such an important contribution. I look forward to being a reviewer as well as a contributor in the near future.

About the Journal: Understanding and Dismantling Privilege provides a forum for extending the dialogues of the annual White Privilege Conference, sharing the strategies and ideas with a wider audience, and providing a space for publishing work that advances social justice for an interdisciplinary audience.

This new, online, journal brings together articles, reflections, creative work, curriculum, tools and strategies. It is committed to examining not only white privilege and oppression, but the intersections of systems of privilege based on race, gender, sexuality, class, and other axes of inequality. Bringing together voices across generations and workplaces, the journal is committed to advancing social justice and dismantling privilege.
